> My Dear Children: Having made the acquaintance of your father, and received from him many acts of kindness, I take great pleasure, in compliance with his wishes, in addressing these lines to you. During a long life, I have observed that those are most happy who love, honor, and obey their parents: who avoid idleness and dissipation, and employ their time in constant labor, both of body and mind: and who perform, with regular and scrupulous attention, all their duties to our Maker, and his only Son, our blessed Saviour. May you live long and prove a blessing to your father and mother, ornaments to society, and acceptable to God. Such is the hope of your father's friend, and although unknown to your friends.
